Dr. Thomas Chase, Interim President and Vice-Chancellor
Administration-Humanities Building 514, University of Regina
3737 Wascana Parkway
Regina, SK S4S 0A2

Dear President Chase:

We are writing this letter today, as the Buffalo Project advisory board, to express our sincere concern over the actions of nine professors at the University of Regina who signed a letter asking our federal government NOT to provide financial assistance to our oil and natural gas industry during this COVID-19 crisis.

You can find the letter at: <https://www.nationalobserver.com/2020/03/25/opinion/265-academics-trudeau-no-bail-out-oil-and-gas-response-covid-19>

Many Buffalo Project founders, University of Regina alumnus and major funders of Saskatchewan's universities, are rightly outraged.

The Buffalo Project supports academic freedom and the principles of free thought and uninhibited research. However, these signatories are not speaking from academic expertise but are parroting a popular ideology that opposes hydrocarbon extraction at any cost, human or economic.

It is also clear from the range of academic specialities represented, that many of the signatories are not experts in either energy markets, environment, nor economics.

Thus, these professors leveraging their positions at the University of Regina, along with a Saudi Arabia/Russia price war and global pandemic, in an effort to divert support from our oil and gas sector, is incomprehensible.

Our oil and gas sector is Canada's largest industry representing 10% of Canada's GDP and approximately 500,000 jobs for Canadian families. It has supported Saskatchewan families and universities with tax revenues, jobs and world-class research for decades.

Furthermore, oil and gas is fundamental to the fight against COVID-19. While heating our homes, we need oil and gas to transport goods and medical supplies. In fact, many of our lifesaving essential medical equipment is derived from oil and gas. We would lose the fight against COVID-19 without MRIs, IV bags and tubes, medical shields, gloves, antiseptics and hundreds of other medical supplies and products.

Another important fact is that many forecasts show global demand for oil will increase for at least the next 30 years. The world needs a supplier of that resource – and we have the third largest oil reserves on the planet and produce it in perhaps the most responsible way on earth.

Saskatchewan should help meet that energy demand, including many of your current and future graduates.

But now the sector needs our support more than ever. Not professors leveraging their titles and institutional reputation to seek its demise.

It is further worth noting that there were NO signatories from the University of Saskatchewan.

Our board would like to formally request a public statement from you indicating the views expressed by the nine professors in the aforementioned letter DO NOT represent the views of the University of Regina to combat any potential perception issues.

Furthermore, the public statement ought to recognize the importance of the oil and gas industry to Saskatchewan, Canada and the world – and how it is worthy of support during this crisis.

Thank you for your leadership of a critical Saskatchewan institution, and for your thoughtful consideration in this matter.

Best regards,
